

Private and Group Lessons

Both Private and Group lessons can be arranged to fit your schedule.

Private lessons are more tailored to the individual's (or partnership's) specific requirements, and are more focused than group lessons. If a regular partnership studies together, the results are much more productive. Private lessons are usually preceded by an evaluation of the methods and Convention Card of the student(s) and observation of the student(s) in play, from which a plan of study is developed.

Group lessons are better if members of the group play interchangeably or if the group has more general needs. Group lessons suffer if some members are prone to scheduling problems, but group lessons can be more cost effective. Group lessons also provide an additional social element to the activities. Group lessons or series of lessons have a particular theme or focus, decided in advance. Small Groups are comprised of four to eight players. Large Groups are comprised of more than eight players.

Private and Group lessons are most effective when the lessons are a minimum of two hours in duration. A Group lesson becomes less effective when the session exceeds three hours. The maximum effective length of a Private lesson is dependent upon the information content and the zeal and stamina of the student(s).
